

Supernatural: Can We Trust Grandpa?

Fans of Supernatural are still contemplating the ramifications of Grandpa Campbell being back from the dead. When we last saw the elder Samuel, thirty years ago, he was taken over by the Yellow Eyed Demon and killed alongside his wife Deanna. But now...he's back!

It seems that when Sammy was raised from Hell, Grandpa Campbell was pulled down from Heaven. Well, that's the story he's telling. But the unanswered questions are numerous. Is his story true? If so, who pulled him down? Should we trust him at all?

The Campbells, Grandpa and the cousins included, are certainly putting doubts in the viewer's mind. They're capturing supernatural creatures, seemingly without Sam's knowledge, but to what end? Are they torturing them or bringing them back for an unknown figurehead? After the closing scene of "Two and a Half Men" (6.02), the mystery deepened. Who was Grandpa on the phone with? Is he working for someone evil? Is he evil?

Personally, I side with Dean in not trusting these newly-found family members. The Campbell bloodline is the Lucifer bloodline, so I can't simply push that aside and trust them on faith. I foresee some evil turns for the Campbell clan.

What do you think? Are we not giving Grandpa the benefit of the doubt or are there dangerous dealings going on? We'll have to wait and see!
