

Joe Flanigan's Best Laid Plans

Unfortunately, all the fans who were looking forward to seeing Joe Flanigan at Collectormania in Glasgow are set to be disappointed. He's recently announced that he will have to cancel that appearance because of work obligations. However, there is a bright side, as those work obligations are because Flanigan has a new project in the works.

It will be a two-hour lead-in, which will hopefully become the pilot for a new show. Flanigan announced on Twitter that the project, currently titled Best Laid Plans, centers around the story of a young couple who inherits five children after their friend passes away.

Hopefully this backdoor will have a fate better than Flanigan's former project Thoughtcrimes, a two-hour movie that would have set-up a full series if picked up. That movie/pilot centered on Freya McAllister (Navi Rawat), who is a telepath later assigned to the NSA. Agent Brendan Dean (Joe Flanigan) becomes her partner at the agency and they develop a nice friendship as they work together. The role has become a fan favorite and many would love to see Flanigan return to the role.

Further information on Best Laid Plans may be forthcoming, perhaps from Flanigan himself, so be sure to follow him on Twitter to get the latest.
